- Remember to dress appropriately for the weather as we move in the winter months. Hats and gloves are a necessity when it gets colder. Elementary students will have outside recess as much as possible so dress accordingly. A hooded sweatshirt may not be appropriate on very cold days. If you need a winter coat, please stop by my office to visit with me. Thank you to parents for ensuring your child is dressed appropriately for the weather.

NFHS & NSAA #BenchBadBehavior

Overton Eagle fans, we can do our part to impart sportsmanship back into high school athletic events. Yelling, screaming, and/or cursing at officials or opposing teams has no place in high school athletics and is a very large reason for the lack of officials in our state. Disagreeing with an official's call is one thing but when the disagreement turns into screaming and berating the individual we have crossed a very dark line. Actions along these lines are grounds for removal from the facility and potential revocation of access to Overton events. We can and need to do our part in this effort. Thank you for your attention and efforts to support the #BenchBadBehavior campaign. Go Eagles!

The SPED department has been working with students to support their individual learning needs and make progress toward their IEP goals.

Several students participate in the Reading WonderWorks intervention program, where they focus on developing vocabulary (understanding and using new words), strengthening oral language skills, completing graphic organizers, reading complex texts and short stories, and building background knowledge. Students also practice answering "wh" questions, using text evidence to support their responses, and writing responses based on what they have read.

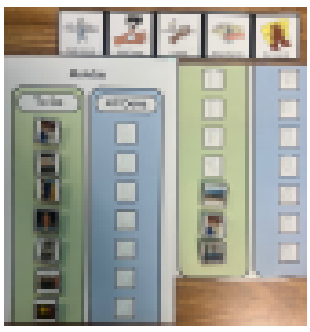

During small-group instruction, students work on identifying topic sentences, locating supporting evidence, explaining how the evidence connects to the topic sentence, and identifying concluding statements.

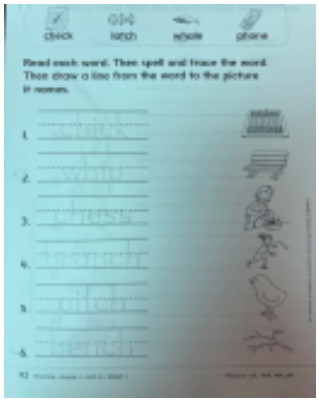

Additional instruction focuses on building reading fluency and accuracy through guided reading activities and Accelerated Reader (AR) assessments.

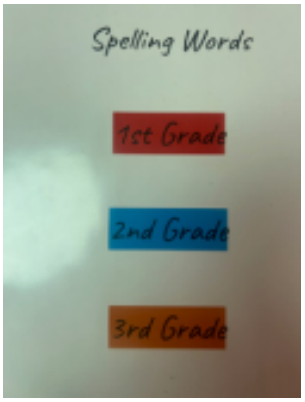

The SPED department also continues to address social skills, behavioral interventions, and self-regulation. Students are working on developing positive peer interactions, managing their behaviors, and building skills that support success in the classroom and throughout the school day. Tips Families Can Use to Help Children Do Better in School

Title I-Educational Service Unit 10

Motivate your child by showing enthusiasm for education

When you stay aware and involved with what your elementary schooler is doing in school, you send your child a motivating message: "I care about you and your education, and I want to help you be successful."

Repeat this message often in a variety of ways. Here's how:

- Review schoolwork. Completing the work is your child's responsibility, but doing a regular review will show you what your child is learning. Monitor the status of assignments, tests, and projects and your child's progress.
- Make your home a place for learning. Help your child create a study area in a spot with few distractions. Highlight connections between what your child is learning and life outside school. Also introduce your child to new ideas and talk about things you have learned recently. This shows your child that learning is something people do all their lives.
- Be a positive voice. Your attitude rubs off on your child. Whenever possible, mention something your child has learned that sounds interesting, and try to find out more together. Express appreciation for things teachers and school staff do. "I like the way Ms. Craig gives you a study packet before your tests."

Five strategies expand vocabulary

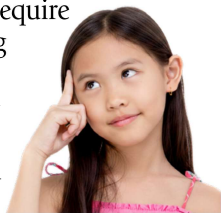

A strong vocabulary supports your child's reading ability. Words that are familiar are easier for students to decode, and knowing the meaning of many words helps your child comprehend the overall meaning of text passages.

To grow your child's vocabulary:

1. Read many kinds of books together. If you usually read fiction, try a book that explains how something works. Or, read a book about a sport or activity your child enjoys.
2. Talk about words your child may not know as you read aloud. "This says that armadillos are nocturnal. Do you know what that means? Let's look it up."
3. Use a thesaurus to help your child learn words with similar meanings to commonly used words. "The moon tonight is bright, brilliant and luminous!"
4. Listen for new words as you watch the news and other shows together. Look them up.
5. Make a personal dictionary. After learning a new word, have your child write the word and its meaning in a notebook.

Ask your child to think

Your child is learning to think analytically and draw conclusions. To provide practice:

- Ask questions that require thought. After watching a show, ask your child, "Why do you think the character did that? Do things like that happen in real life?"
- Consider different points of view. When discussing a topic, ask "How do you think someone else might feel about it?"
- Think out loud when you make a decision. Ask your child to brainstorm the pros and cons of each option with you.

Express high expectations

Having high, realistic expectations for your child fosters achievement. To establish them:

- Factor in your child's development, personality and maturity.
- Focus on key school success behaviors.
- Explain them in simple, clear terms.

Gift-making is enriching

Making gifts helps develop small motor, problem-solving and communication skills—and lets your child experience the pleasure that comes from giving. Your elementary schooler could:

- Write a poem about a special person.
- Decorate a picture frame and add a photo of your child with the person.
- Draw 12 pictures and use them to make a calendar for 2027.
- Read a book aloud and record it for a younger sibling to listen to while reading.

Q&A What can I do to manage study time more effectively?

Q: My two children approach assignments very differently. The older one spends hours a day on them and asks for my help constantly. The younger one races through, or claims not to have any work to do. Is there a happy medium?

A: While teachers' homework practices vary, your childrens' opposite approaches to doing the work can be managed by taking the same three steps:

1. Contact their teachers. Ask about time expectations for assignments. Hours a day is likely more than your older child's teacher expects. Could it be so much because your child isn't finishing classwork in school? Your younger child's teacher may plan more in-class assignments, or may have suggestions for specific material your child should focus on at home.
2. Set an appropriate daily study time for each child. If there are no assignments, they can read, solve math problems or review. A set amount of time gives your younger child less incentive to rush through work.
3. Provide structure. At the start of every study session, go over the work your children have to do. Help them set priorities and make to-do lists. Stay nearby, but encourage your older child to work independently. Check at the end that they have completed everything on their lists.

Parent Quiz Are you helping ease test anxiety?

It's common for children to be nervous before a test. But panicking can keep your child from performing up to capability. Are you helping your elementary schooler manage test anxiety? Answer yes or no below:

1. Do you help your child create and follow a study plan? Feeling prepared reduces anxiety.
2. Do you say that test scores won't affect your love for your child?
3. Do you urge your child to talk to the teacher about test fears? The teacher may be able to offer reassurance or strategies for coping.
4. Do you suggest self-talk your child can repeat, such as "I know this. It will come to me"?
5. Do you practice calming techniques with your child, like deep breathing and counting backwards from 100?

How well are you doing?

More yes answers mean you are helping take the fear out of tests. For each no, try that idea.

"Today has no idea it's about to meet your awesome face. You've got this."
—Kid President

Make time for math talk

Talking about math can strengthen your child's confidence and competence in the subject. To prompt math conversations:

- Ask questions. When your child solves a math problem, ask, "How did you get your answer?" Explaining helps children clarify thinking—and catch errors.
- Add math to games, such as Simon Says ("Simon says add 18 plus 18"). On the road, take turns solving problems using numbers on signs. If the speed limit is 65, players can solve 6+5, 6-5 and 6×5.

Offer praise that's deserved

Praising your child's effort and achievements provides encouragement. But too much unearned praise can reduce motivation. Offer compliments that are:

- Specific and detailed. Highlight behaviors you want your child to repeat.
- Accurate. Rather than saying "You're the best piano player ever, say "You are making real progress playing smoothly!"
- Meaningful. Save praise for times when your child has really earned it.

Is your child missing out?

There is a clear relationship between early grade attendance and later achievement. Kids who attend classes regularly in the early grades carry the habit forward and are more likely to graduate. Students who miss a lot of school in kindergarten are still frequently absent in fifth grade—and missing learning.

If you are unsure how many days your child has missed this year, check with the school. It's not too late to get back on track.

Daily Learning Planner: Ideas Families Can Use to Help Children Do Well in School—Try a New Idea Every Day!

1. Glue a picture of your elementary schooler to a piece of paper. Have your child draw things that represent personal strengths around the picture.
2. Declare today Compliment Others Day. At dinner, have everyone talk about the compliments they paid to friends, classmates, colleagues, etc.
3. Teach your child how to disagree respectfully—by speaking privately and politely, asking questions rather than accusing, etc.
4. Share the responsibility for holiday preparations. When kids help, they appreciate holidays even more.
5. Let your child invite a school friend over.
6. Talk with your child about courage. Look for examples of people who demonstrate courage.
7. Allow a few minutes after lights are out for a quiet chat with your child.
8. Help your child make a paper chain to count down the number of days left until January 1. Tear off one link per day.
9. Review math vocabulary words with your child, such as sum, difference, product and quotient.
10. Today is Human Rights Day. Talk with your child about rights and responsibilities.
11. Create a family logbook. Encourage everyone to jot down each day's thoughts, reminders and accomplishments.
12. Visit the library with your child. Check out a book about holiday traditions around the world.
13. Pretend to go back in time with your child. Pick a period in time and reenact an event together.
14. Does your child know who to call in an emergency? Make a list for your refrigerator. Practice what to say.
15. Ask your child "what if" questions. "What if it never rained?"
16. Have your child label four columns on a sheet of paper Spring, Summer, Fall and Winter, and then write descriptive words for each season.
17. Read a favorite fairy tale to your child.
18. Have your child make a list of fun screen-free things to do when there's nothing to do.
19. Ask your child to help you organize something, such as a junk drawer.
20. At dinner tonight, have everyone talk about gifts they would like to receive that don't cost money.
21. Try blowing bubbles with your child in freezing weather. How does the cold affect them? Look for ice forming on the bubbles.
22. Arrange for your child to talk with a student who is home from college this month about what college life is like.
23. Play a board game as a family this evening.
24. When you're in the car, have your child estimate how far it is to your destination. Use the odometer to check.
25. Give your child a gift certificate good for one special activity with you.
26. Check online to see if there's a rink where you and your child can go roller skating or ice skating.
27. Help your child think of something nice to do for a neighbor or friend.
28. Find out what's inside a seed. Have your child soak a dry bean overnight, remove the coat and pull the halves apart.
29. Ask your child, "What is your favorite book? Why?"
30. Have a contest. Who can name the most parts of the body?
31. Help your child make a list of 10 things learned in 2026.
